The Quaint Little Settlement in Poverty Hollow Obliterated.

Grave Rescue of a Babe by Policeman McLaughlin.

Eight Houses Destroyed and a Score of People Made Homeless.

The peculiar little settlement in Harlem known as "Doorville and Poverty Hollow," at One Hundred and Eighty-fourth street and Tenth avenue, east, was entirely obliterated this morning by a stubborn and at one time a very dangerous fire.

The blaze was confined to what is called Pullman place, so named from the man, J. J. Pullman, who erected the row of eight one-story frame houses on the lot.

They are numbered from 1 to 8 inclusive and were constructed entirely from second-hand doors, when Pullman purchased by the hundred on speculation a couple of years ago. Hence the appellation "Doorville."

These small habitations are all nestled together on the side of the steep bluff which rises from the Harlem river about a block above the Washington bridge.

This morning about 6 o'clock Policeman McLaughlin, of the West One Hundred and Fifty-second street station, was attracted to Poverty Hollow by the bright red glare of the clear sky in that neighborhood.

As he neared One Hundred and Eighty-fourth street he heard the crisp crackling of burning timbers, and turning down towards Pullman place he saw the roofs of the entire row of Doorville's houses ablaze.

He knocked with his nightstick on the doors and shouted "Fire!" in his loudest tones. Fred Van Buren, who lived in No. 5, ran out first and assisted Officer McLaughlin in arousing his neighbors.

The highly inflammable character of the diminutive houses made it easy and dangerous work for the flames to spread, and in ten minutes the houses numbered 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 were burning fiercely.

At this time nobody happened on alarm, and there was no apparatus on hand to extinguish the fire.

The few men who retained their presence of mind were busy in the effort to rescue all the occupants of the burning dwellings first. A number of women and children had extremely narrow escapes.

In the house No. 6, occupied and owned by John Armstrong, there was an exciting scene. Mr. Armstrong is a baker and works at night. He was away as usual last night and only his wife and several young children were at home.

Repeated knockings at the door failed at first to awaken the Armstrongs, and finally Officer McLaughlin broke in with a strong kick.

The occupants were frantic with fear, and all ran out into the chilly, piercing breeze with no other covering than their night-dresses.

Suddenly Mrs. Armstrong uttered a wild shriek: "My baby! He's in there!"

McLaughlin, without hesitation, dashed in and in a back chamber found an infant in a cot sleeping soundly and all unconscious of danger.

He grabbed the child and rushed from the house not a moment too soon.

Soon after the little roof fell in with a tiny crash, but Mrs. Armstrong's babe was safely rescued to its mother's arms.

After saving all the occupants safely extricated from the burning houses, Officer McLaughlin proceeded to give an alarm.

He got as far as One Hundred and Seventy-sixth street and Tenth avenue to turn in the box, when, to his dismay, the key was not in the door. He had to return, and at length the engine and ladder trucks and hose arrived.

Each was found by an officer in a cellar, but several blocks apart. Neither could tell how or where the fire had started, and the men were advised in white bandages at Bellevue Hospital.

"They ought to go to a hospital," said Judge Dwyer, and as Tom Dinneen nodded approval of this idea the men were sentenced to ten days and the officer directed to see that they were placed in the hospital.

Frank Leonard was found half-nude in a Leonard street tenement.

"I've got a mother, six months old, and a two-year-old boy," said Leonard, who was found in a Leonard street tenement.

He Disposes of Cases at the Tombs Like a Veteran.

Justice and Mercy Dispensed in Chunks by the New Magistrate.

It was exactly 9 o'clock when Police Justice Patrick Dwyer bustled into the Tombs Court-room this morning.

A long line of tiny policemen in blue and brass ranged along the walls, just as though they had read a sign, like those in the Bowdler, informing them that "this forms a bar."

The cases were filled with people of bad odor morally and hygienically considered, and the seats for the sovereign people were filled with unkempt, ill-clad friends of the unfortunate who had been gathered in to make up the morning's list.

Tom Dinneen, the old-timer of the Tombs Court, who has been selected by Justice Dwyer as his personal clerk, had everything nicely arranged for the speedy disposition of the cases to come, and Judge Dwyer opened business with a quick, energetic—

"No, I'm an engineer on a Red Star steamer who came ashore and got drunk. He promised to steam up and sail away, and the Court let him go."

Patrick McGarr came next.

"Now, Pat, the officer says you were very bad, but I'll let you off. Is that so?" says Judge Dwyer.

"Yes, Your Honor. I got a dose of whiskey," replied the thoroughly penitent Patrick.

"How many had you?"

"Well about three or four I think, and I wish you let me home and I'll get me some more."

"I'll give you ten days to get the run out of you, but," was the response of the Court.

"The new Judge had got the swing, and the rest of the watch was disposed of as if it were the Fourth Warder had sat on the bench ten years."

"Martin Well, you say you were out to buy Christmas presents when you lay down to sleep in the street. Did you get all the presents?"

"Yes, Your Honor, I got them all," replied the thoroughly penitent Patrick.

"Yes, sir, I got them all," replied the thoroughly penitent Patrick.

Positively the Stage Will Know "Our Mary" No More.

A New Melodrama to Be Produced by Kate Claxton.

A private letter from Miss Mary Anderson, dated at Tunbridge Wells, has been received in this city and it contains some highly interesting material.

Miss Anderson positively states that she will never again appear upon the stage, and that she has settled down into private life.

It is said that she has been approached by a theatrical manager to appear in England, but that she has declined to do so, and is now content to hold any communication with him whatsoever.

Mrs. Navarre, who returned to America on the 19th, says that Miss Anderson will come to this country in the spring, but Miss Anderson, while not denying this, makes it very clear that, from a dramatic point of view, she is dead. She has been staying at Tunbridge Wells for some time, and will pass the rest of the winter in Bournemouth. So much for Mary's letter.

Miss Kate Claxton, who is now pleading the cause of "The Two Orphans" at the Columbia Theatre, is to produce a new melodrama by Harvey, of London, at the People's Theatre in March. Those irrepressible organs certainly ought not to be jealous.

Oh, the irreverence of the street gamins! Little do the bill-posters wot of the indignities to which their beautiful lithographs are frequently subjected.

At the corner of Madison street and Twenty-first street a sign is displayed for the advertisement of a theatrical company, which reads in its entirety: "The 'Two Orphans' at the People's Theatre in March. Those irrepressible organs certainly ought not to be jealous."

The indictment against O'Hara charges him with robbery, larceny and extortion. The facts have been formulated and brought to the notice of District Attorney Fleming by the Jefferson Democratic Association.

James A. McKenna is President. The Association is a body of men who are known to the public as the "Boys of the Board of Excise."

When Mayor Gleason assumed office in 1886, he appointed Andrew Morris, John Slattery and John J. Kelly members of the Board of Excise.

They created a new office called the official police public and local, and appointed O'Hara to that position.

Before this time a man applying for a license could be refused on any ground, but now the license is given to all who apply, and the only ground for refusal is that the applicant is a member of the Board of Excise.

It has been estimated that 25 per cent. of the theatrical parties based in this country have been secured by Neil Burgess. Mr. Burgess is great on the patent rights.

The American "husler" who took Miss Grace Hawthorne to London seems to be "booming" her with renewed vigor. According to the latest reports, she is now in the hands of the "Boys of the Board of Excise."

An Interesting, but Threatening, Twenty-Round Glove Contest.

Pat Murcham's Death—A Yorkville Yacht Club Boom.

An interesting twenty-round glove contest took place last night between Alex Gallacher and Pat Murcham.

The contest was a very close one, and it was not until the twentieth round that the result was decided.

Pat Murcham, the well-known half-mile runner, died on Thursday last week and was buried on Saturday.

At O'Brien, of Philadelphia, who came here to fight the winner, will be matched with McGinnis within a few days.
